Let's Make Cancer History
1 888 939-3333 | www.cancer.ca

The Canadian Cancer Society leads a large, collective, powerful force against cancer. We are relentless in pursuing our goal of creating a future where no Canadian has to fear cancer. The support of Canadians empowers us to make a difference in the fight against cancer. Together, we'll make cancer history.

"We are grateful to all our fundraising volunteers across Canada, as well as the volunteers and people who contributed to the success of Relay For Life. Their contribution supports the strongest team in Canada dedicated to a multi-faceted fight against cancer."

Dr. Barbara Whylie

OUR COLLECTIVE FORCE LEADS TO MAJOR MILESTONE

Recently, the Canadian Cancer Society celebrated a major achievement in our efforts to eradicate cancer. In the federal budget $52 million per year for five years was announced to implement the Canadian Strategy for Cancer Control. The Society was a leader in the development of the Strategy and we've been leaders in lobbying the government for funding and implementation. Having a fully funded Strategy in place is crucial as Canada must be ready to meet the challenge of our increasing number of new cancer cases due to our aging and growing population.

The Canadian Strategy for Cancer Control is a coordinated, comprehensive approach to managing cancer in Canada. It includes investments in prevention, research, screening, treatment, and supportive and palliative care. The Strategy will help prevent new cancer cases, reduce disability, suffering and death from the disease, and minimize the social and economic impacts of cancer. It will enable cancer experts, health professionals and individuals to manage cancer effectively and efficiently across Canada and in local communities.

This victory in our cancer-fighting efforts is largely due to the many volunteers and staff across Canada who never gave up in their efforts to secure funding for the Strategy. Our powerful, collective voice makes a difference.

We are looking forward to working with the federal and provincial governments and the cancer community to implement the Strategy as soon as possible.

RAISING THE FUNDS TO MAKE CANCER HISTORY

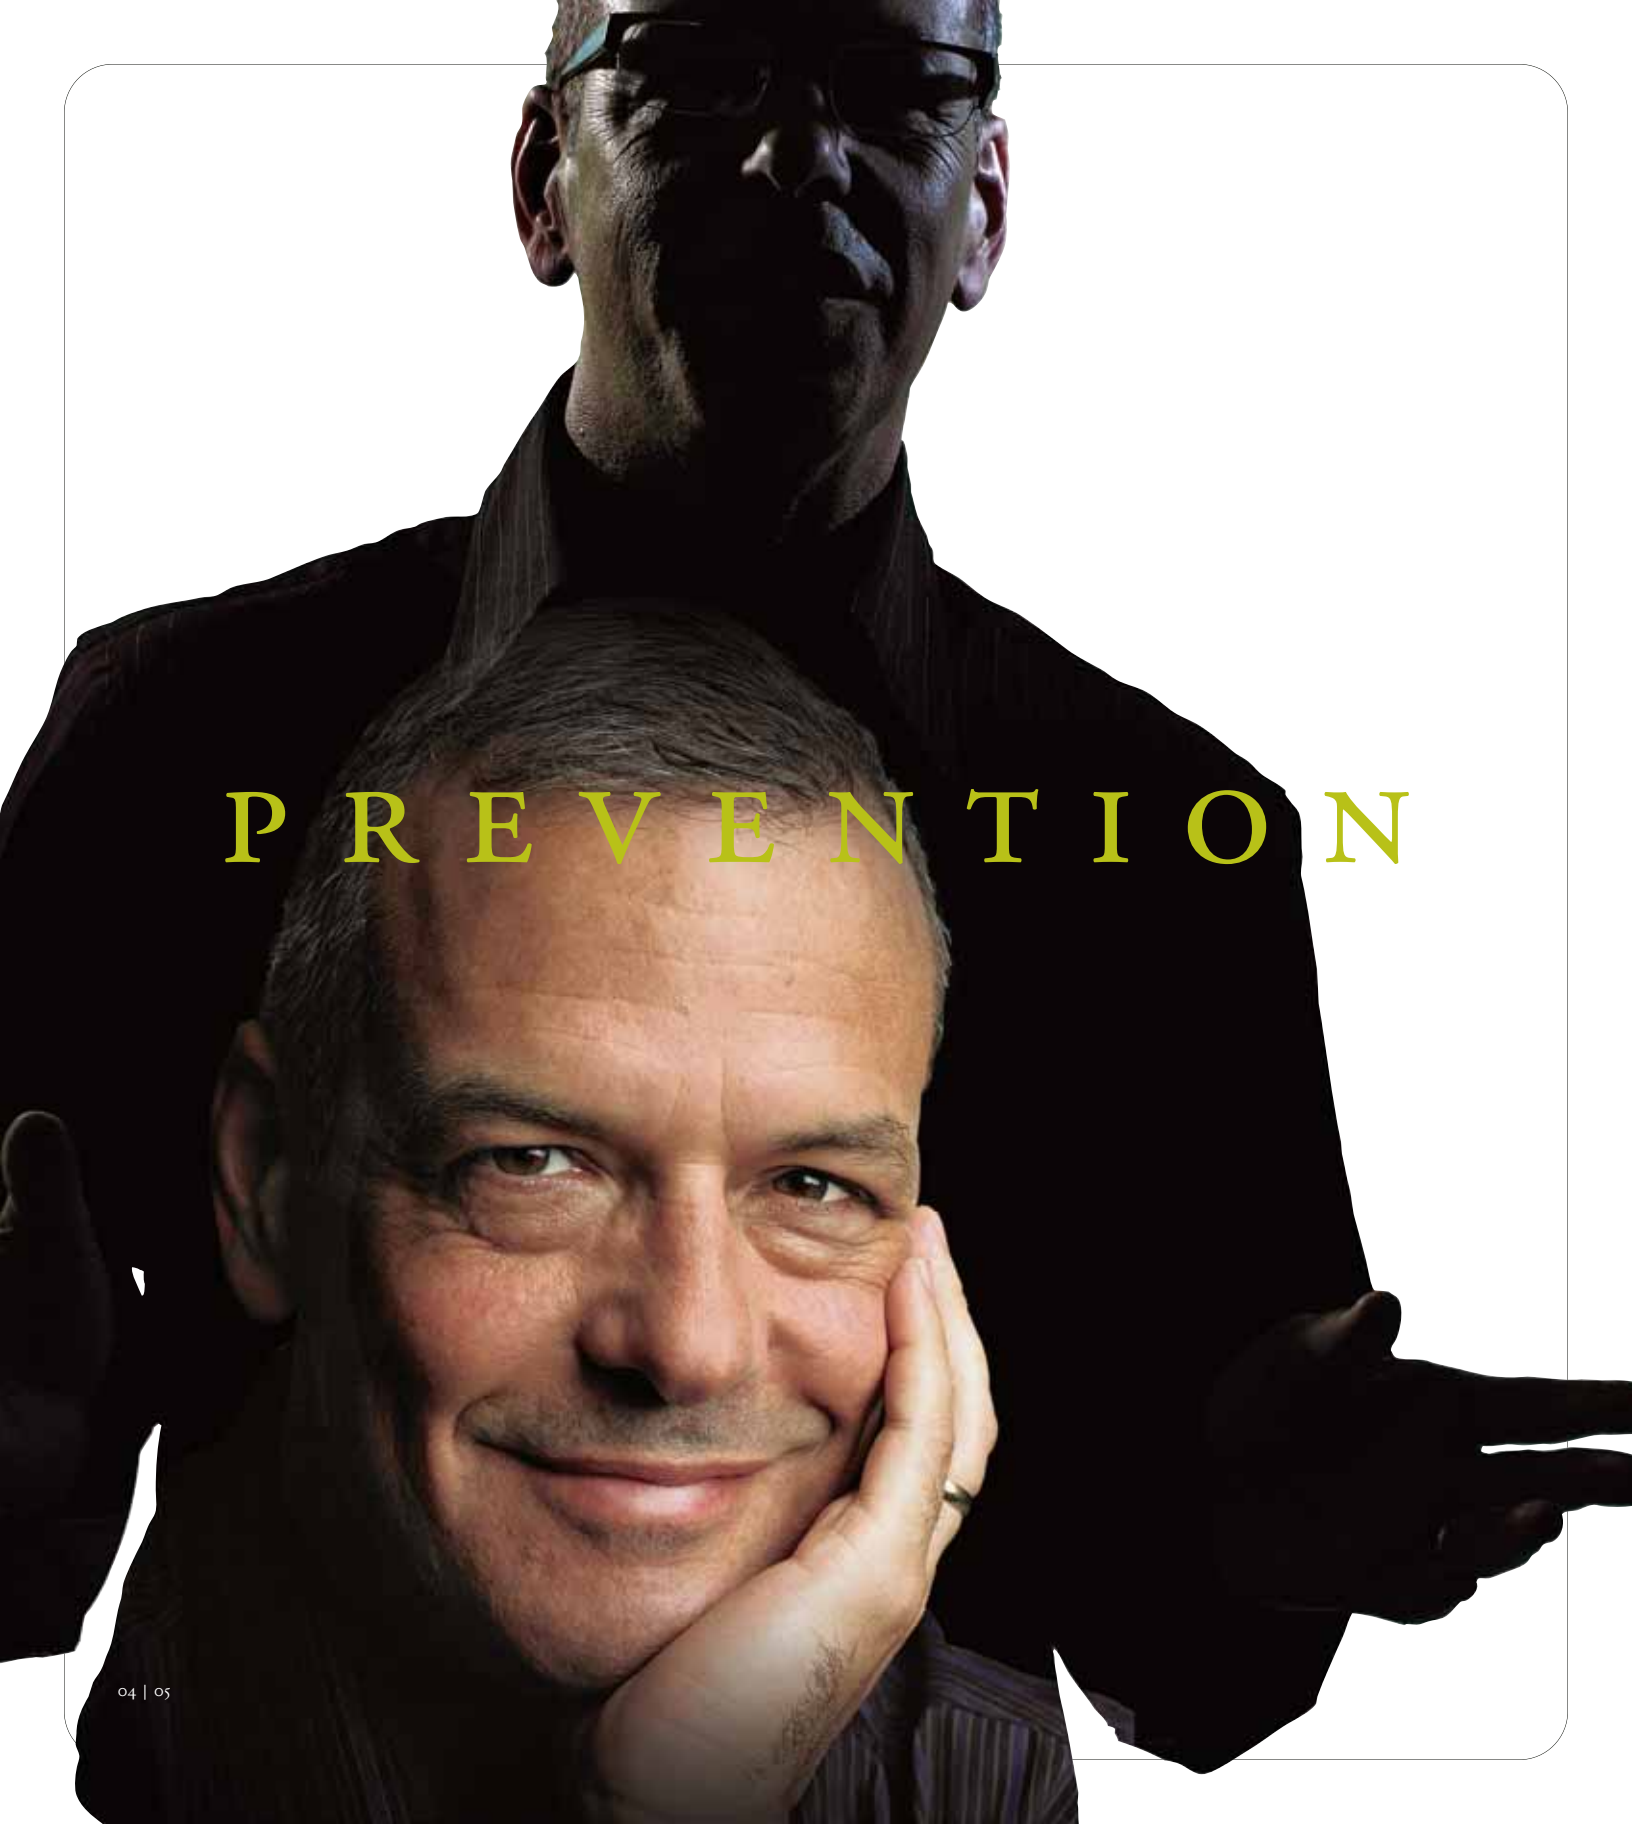
This year, the Society raised close to $180 million from generous Canadians from coast to coast. We thank each and every one of you.

Our signature national special event – Relay For Life – brings thousands of people together in hundreds of communities across Canada. This year almost $32 million was raised by more than 138,000 participants in over 280 communities throughout Canada. While it's an important fundraising event for the Society, it is also a night of remembering people who have survived cancer, paying tribute to those who didn't, and being with your family, friends and community.

We are grateful to all our fundraising volunteers across Canada, as well as the volunteers and people who contributed to the success of Relay For Life. Their contribution supports the strongest team in Canada dedicated to a multi-faceted fight against cancer.

On a final note, we salute our 220,000 volunteers across Canada who are the true heroes in the fight against cancer and who are making cancer history. They are our backbone, our source of strength, and our hope for the future. They are the force that allows us to continue our work in prevention, providing support for people with cancer, lobbying governments, providing cancer information for all Canadians and funding important research. Working in partnership with our approximately 800 staff across Canada, they are leading us to a cancer-free future.

In the pages of this report, you will read the stories of some of our outstanding volunteers, hear from people who benefit from the work they do, and find out about an exciting research discovery. We know these stories will inform and inspire you, as they did for us.



PREVENTION

PROTECTING CANADIANS, REDUCING RISK

We know that at least 50 per cent of cancers can be prevented through people adopting healthy lifestyles. And the Canadian Cancer Society is committed to making healthy choices easy choices for Canadians. We know Canadians are concerned about cancer-causing substances, including those in our environment. We're harnessing the power of the largest collective force fighting cancer in Canada so more Canadians are empowered to take action and fewer will be diagnosed with the disease.

THE COURAGE TO QUIT

After years of smoking, Paul Fraumeni wasn't feeling so great. He was plagued by colds and a smoker's cough. And then a high-school friend died from smoking-related causes. Paul knew it was time to do something. So he called the Canadian Cancer Society and was promptly sent the One Step at a Time booklet for people who want to quit smoking. Leafing through it, Paul was glad to see that he wouldn't have to quit cold turkey, which hadn't worked for him in the past. "The Society's booklet offered a rational, step-by-step process," says Paul, a University of Toronto public relations professional. He felt "an incredible sense of accomplishment" as he gradually cut back the pack-a-day habit he'd developed over 27 years. "The booklet was absolutely essential," says Paul. "It made my smoking something that I could analyze and get control of." After quitting, Paul made other lifestyle changes too. He reduced fat in his diet, took up baseball again and began running with his daughter. Now, about seven kilograms lighter, Paul has just run a half-marathon. He rarely has colds and no longer coughs when he laughs. "I'm a whole new guy," he says proudly. "I feel younger now at 48 than I did at 38."

HIGHLIGHTS

Prevention is a vital part of the Canadian Cancer Society's work. We are committed to doing all we can to lobby for healthy public policies to make healthy choices easy choices, to ensure people have the information they need to reduce their cancer risk, and to fund important prevention research.

In addition to our ongoing work in prevention, we work in partnership with others. We are active participants on a national committee that developed recommendations about the prevention of cancers associated with environmental and work-related toxins. These recommendations urge action to eliminate or lower exposure to cancer-causing substances in the workplace and in the environment.

The Society believes people have the right to know if they are being exposed to substances that cause cancer. Canadians must be able to make informed decisions and take knowledgeable action about their work and living conditions. As part of this, we strongly support the move to list ingredients in consumer products. In addition, we believe it's important that an easily recognizable symbol be used so people can clearly and quickly identify whether a product has cancer-causing agents.

An international clinical trial launched with funding from the Canadian Cancer Society is examining if the drug exemestane (Aromasin) can prevent breast cancer in women who are at increased risk for the disease. Since drugs of this type have already proven successful in preventing breast cancer recurrence, researchers hope that this will be an effective approach to preventing the development of the disease in the first place.

SPEAKING UP TO CREATE HEALTHY ENVIRONMENTS

The Canadian Cancer Society's collective voice is powerful, and we use it to speak up for Canadians. We believe that Canadians should not be exposed to cancer-causing substances, including those in the environment. And we work hard to make it easy for Canadians to adopt healthy lifestyles to reduce their cancer risk. We've been leaders in banning smoking and we speak out against the cosmetic use of pesticides and other environmental issues. We're strong, we're being heard, and we're working for you.

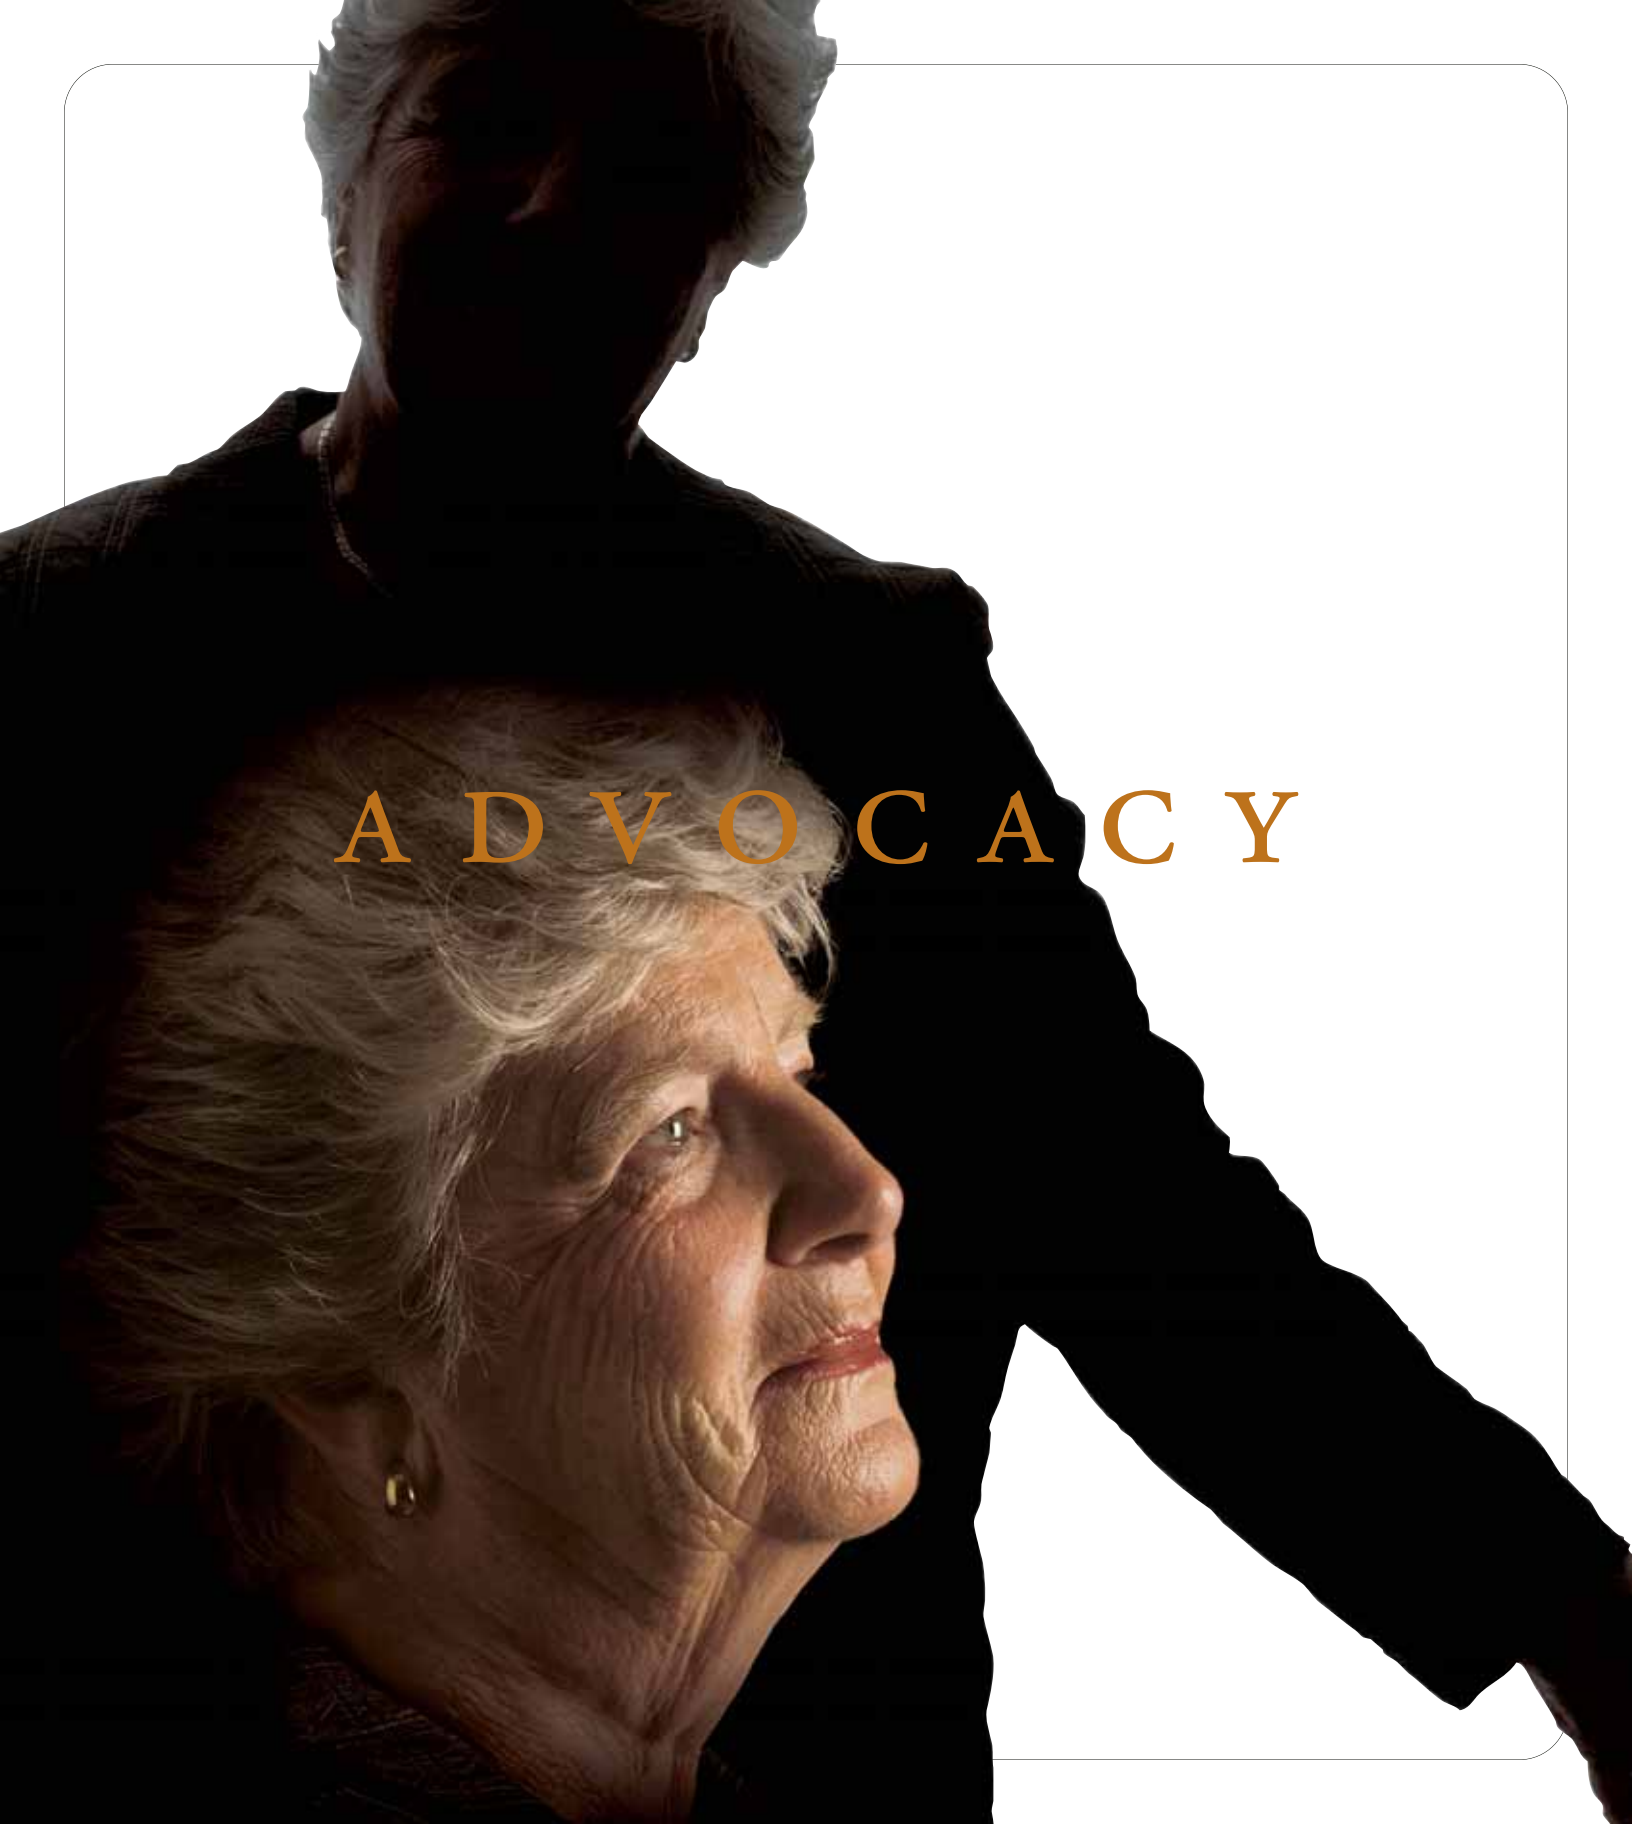
WORKING TO PROTECT CANADIANS

Ever since she volunteered at a cancer clinic years ago, Marilyn Moffatt has single-mindedly pursued one goal: to work with other committed people to help eradicate cancer. These days, that means convincing her home city of Ottawa to ban the cosmetic use of pesticides on residential lawns and gardens. "It just doesn't make sense to expose people to these chemicals for the sake of prettier lawns," says Marilyn. "It's time to take action to limit the risk to human health." The grandmother of ten is particularly worried about children, who are "especially vulnerable and can't protect themselves." In 2002, Marilyn – a 30-year volunteer with the Canadian Cancer Society – jumped at a chance to become the Society's representative in a coalition advocating for a ban on cosmetic pesticides in Ottawa. Since then, she's appeared before school groups, journalists and city councillors, making the case against pesticides. Despite setbacks, Marilyn believes local politicians will ultimately do the right thing. "I feel positive that as more people take up the charge and more municipalities elsewhere take a stand, the result will be a ban."

HIGHLIGHTS

Canadian Cancer Society leadership results in a major victory for all Canadians. The federal government announced funding of $52 million a year for five years to implement the Canadian Strategy for Cancer Control. The Society was a leader in the development of the Strategy and we've been leaders in lobbying the government for funding and implementation. We knew that without this important Strategy, Canada would not be prepared for the predicted increasing number of new cancer cases due to our aging and growing population. A fully funded Strategy will help prevent new cancer cases, reduce disability, suffering and death from the disease, and minimize the social and economic impacts of cancer.

Cigarette smoking causes about 30 per cent of cancer deaths in Canada. We are leaders in tobacco control and have led the way in smoking bans and tobacco control programs. This year, the Canadian Cancer Society strongly supported the British Columbia government in its efforts to recover medical costs from the tobacco industry. We applauded the Supreme Court of Canada ruling that unanimously upheld the validity of B.C. legislation seeking these costs.



ADVOCACY

RESEARCH

WORKING TOGETHER TO MAKE A DIFFERENCE

Cancer is complex. It is actually 200 diseases, and each of these diseases acts differently. While the challenge is huge, the collective strength and wisdom of Canadian Cancer Society-funded researchers are making a difference. They are finding ways to prevent the disease, more effective ways to treat it and better ways to detect it early. Progress comes in small steps, but each advance is paving the way to a future where no Canadian has to fear cancer.

PREVENTING CERVICAL CANCER

Imagine if we could prevent one of the most common cancers for women. The exciting news is that we may soon be able to do that with cervical cancer. The reason for hope: a new vaccine. "This has huge implications for women everywhere," says Dr. Eduardo Franco, a Canadian Cancer Society-funded researcher whose pioneering work contributed to the vaccine's development. A renowned epidemiologist at Montreal's McGill University, Dr. Franco helped discover that cervical cancer is almost always caused by an infection with a sexually transmitted virus called human papillomavirus (HPV). Collaborating with U.S. and Brazilian researchers in a clinical trial, he tested an experimental vaccine against HPV. The results were spectacular: the vaccine was nearly 100 per cent effective in preventing infection with the two types of HPV that most commonly cause cervical cancer. "This holds promise as an effective approach to preventing this cancer," says Dr. Franco. "A vaccine could contribute substantially to reducing worldwide rates of cervical cancer." Each year, more than 1,300 women are diagnosed with cervical cancer in Canada and almost 250,000 women die of the disease worldwide. Pharmaceutical companies have now developed two vaccines against cervical cancer. In 2006, the vaccine was approved in both Canada and the United States. Dr. Franco calls his role a "high point" in his research: "It's so gratifying to contribute to the fight against cancer in this way."

HIGHLIGHTS

This year, the Canadian Cancer Society contributed more than $52.4 million to cancer research for a broad range of research across all types of cancers including breast, prostate, colorectal and lung. This includes:

- $5.5 million to the National Cancer Institute of Canada Clinical Trials Group, which conducts national and international trials about cancer;
- $2.4 million for the Centre for Behavioural Research and Program Evaluation, which conducts high quality research and program evaluation that contributes to improved cancer prevention and care within Canada;
- $500,000 to the Canadian Tobacco Control Research Initiative.

In concert with its research partner the National Cancer Institute of Canada, the Society finalized a plan to have a panel of prevention research experts review the current state of knowledge about cancer prevention in Canada and around the world. These experts will then identify gaps in our knowledge and make recommendations about how they can be filled.

Researchers funded by the Canadian Cancer Society lead a news-making international clinical trial. Results from the trial found that chemotherapy following surgery for patients with early-stage non-small cell lung cancer increased the five-year survival rate by 15 per cent. There was also a significant reduction in the rate of cancer recurrence among patients. The findings have had an immediate impact on how patients with this common lung cancer are treated around the world.

We have been funding important prevention research, including:

- investigating genetic and environmental factors that may cause acute lymphoblastic leukemia – one of the most common childhood cancers;
- identifying risk factors for prostate cancer including exposure to chemical agents found in the workplace, physical inactivity, smoking and alcohol use;
- investigating possible environmental and genetic factors that might contribute to the development of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma.

AVAILABLE FOR ALL, TAILORED FOR YOU

A diagnosis of cancer can turn your life upside down. Getting information can help put it right again. Clear, concise information can help you understand your disease and assist you in knowing what questions to ask. The Canadian Cancer Society is a leading source of cancer information in Canada. You can get the information you need from us in print, by telephone or e-mail, or on our website. No matter what source you choose, the Canadian Cancer Society team ensures the information is clear, credible and comprehensive.

EMPOWERING INFORMATION

Dealing with a rare kind of cancer, Joan Sheppard had countless questions. She wasn't sure where to turn for answers. "I wanted to know more and I needed to talk to somebody," says Joan, who lives in Robert's Arm, a rural town in Newfoundland. A friend suggested that she call the Canadian Cancer Society's toll-free Cancer Information Service. She did – and was immediately connected to a trained information specialist with a wealth of information at her fingertips. Joan, who has an uncommon type of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, picked up valuable information about her condition. "It was important because it made me more informed when I talked with my doctors," she says. "I could ask better questions." Looking back, Joan is glad that she made the call. "The specialist was informed and caring. She made me feel like I was not alone." Today, the busy 54-year-old grandmother is in great shape. "I eat well, sleep well and am positive about the future."

HIGHLIGHTS

More than 660,000 people have been helped by the Canadian Cancer Society's toll-free, bilingual Cancer Information Service since its national launch in 1996. Our unique one-on-one personalized service provides information tailored to each person's needs. Information is available in a number of languages, including Cantonese, Mandarin, Italian, Japanese, Punjabi and Farsi.

The Society distributes three million print materials across Canada providing current, comprehensive information about all aspects of cancer.

The Canadian Cancer Society website receives almost 8,000 visits daily. Our website provides current, easily accessible information about all aspects of cancer. Major changes, additions and updates were made to the website to make it even more user-friendly and easier to navigate. Visit us at cancer.ca

INFORMATION

SUPPORT

HELPING EASE YOUR JOURNEY

More than 150,000 Canadians will be diagnosed with cancer this year and the Society's team is there to help. We offer support, information and compassion for people living with cancer, their caregivers, family and friends. During a cancer experience, having someone to talk to who has been in the same place can make a world of difference. We want you to know that you're not alone. We help ease your load. We're there for you.

GIVING BACK

Not long after she and her husband lost their jobs and then their house and car, Gilda Neri was diagnosed with breast cancer. "Life is full of surprises," says the Winnipeg mother of two. Scared and uncertain, she needed to speak to someone who could relate. Through the Canadian Cancer Society, Gilda was matched with a mother like her who had also experienced breast cancer. "She helped to alleviate my fears and sadness about what was happening to me," says Gilda. During her treatment, Gilda decided that, when she was better, she too wanted to make a difference in the lives of people facing cancer. So she trained and volunteered for the Society's CancerConnection program, a telephone-based service that matches cancer survivors with people experiencing the disease. As of this year, Gilda has provided support to 15 people with cancer. Originally from the Philippines, she often helps out in her native language. "I can identify with people who are going through cancer," she says. "I try to offer them some peace of mind, to ensure that they will get through this." For Gilda, it's personally rewarding. "It makes me feel good if I can help somebody," she says. "I feel lucky that I am able to do this."

HIGHLIGHTS

More than 1,200 CancerConnection volunteers helped 6,200 people with cancer this year. CancerConnection, a telephone-based program, provides support to people diagnosed with cancer and their caregivers. It links them with a trained volunteer who has had a similar cancer experience. And it also helps them find community resources. It's free, accessible, confidential and responsive.

A new resource to help improve existing Canadian Cancer Society support groups and to develop new ones is launched. This guide ensures we continue to provide support to people with cancer as effectively as possible.

FINANCIAL HIGHLIGHTS

For the period February 1, 2005 to January 31, 2006

We are pleased to present the Statement of Financial Activities for the Canadian Cancer Society for the period of February 1, 2005 to January 31, 2006.

The Canadian Cancer Society's Board of Directors is committed to careful stewardship of the Society's financial resources. During the year, the Society has demonstrated financial responsibility and ensured that due diligence is a key component in the conduct of its financial affairs.

The Board of Directors, through the Performance Assurance Committee, is responsible for determining that management fulfills its responsibilities in the preparation of the financial statements. The committee ensures the financial and operational controls adequately protect and safeguard the assets and the reputation of the Society. The committee is composed of eight volunteers, one of whom is the Chair.

In fulfilling its primary role of financial oversight, the Performance Assurance Committee meets with the Society's management to review the financial statements and the accounting policies the Society follows. The committee also meets with the Society's external auditors, KPMG LLP, to review the results of the annual audit of the financial statements.

The complete financial statements, including the notes to the financial statements and the auditor's report, are available on our website (www.cancer.ca) or by calling our national office at 416-961-7223.

Norman Achen
Chair, Performance Assurance Committee

CORPORATE RECOGNITION 2005/2006

Progress is made one donation at a time. As we continue to work towards our mission of eradicating cancer, the Canadian Cancer Society benefits from the generosity of companies across the country. As some of Canada's best corporate citizens, these companies take a leadership role in the fight against cancer, demonstrating to their employees, customers and community that they care.

Cancer is truly everyone's business and the Canadian Cancer Society offers companies the opportunity to make a difference. By supporting the Canadian Cancer Society, these companies enhance their corporate image, differentiate themselves from the competition and foster customer and employee loyalty. By investing with the Canadian Cancer Society, companies are giving back, getting ahead and helping us do more.

The following corporations, employee groups, foundations and associations comprise the Society's top contributors. With their ongoing support, we will continue to fund promising research, provide information services and support programs and improve the quality of life for those living with cancer. Although we appreciate all contributions, only those organizations that contributed $10,000 or more are listed.
